About Redbank Mines

Redbank Mines is an Australian based ASX-listed resource company (ASX: RBM) focused on the development of the Redbank Copper Mine in the north east of the Northern Territory.

The project is located in the Redbank Mineral Field in the NT, where the Company holds a substantial ground position. The region hosts significant economic copper mineralisation and is highly prospective for copper, cobalt, phosphate, manganese and uranium.

The Company acquired the Redbank Copper Mine in 2005, and had been generating some cashflow from the treatment of high grade oxide stockpiles to produce a high quality concentrate. The tenement package included numerous advanced copper targets.

In December 2007, Redbank secured an exploration joint venture with Glencore International, one of the world's largest commodity suppliers. The Company has also signed an off-take agreement with Glencore for the life of mine, based on marked based spot prices of copper.
